ARRIVED, when its beams fail on laughing eyes and rosy lips and flowing drapery. And you remember that this thought has frequently occurred to you before. The musical ceho of a corner's call, full, smooth, round, rings through the woods like the beli which summons to prayer. You make to a source of dut. There is serwoods like the belt which summons to prayer. You awake to a some of daily. There is service at the tabernacle, and thither the girls are going. You will go, too, and you fall behind the nearest beyy of beauties, if inking that the groves were God's first templea, and how exquisite is the fit of that Swiss muchin drews before you. Ere man had learned to hew the shaft or lay the architrave the feminine taste, always perfect and inimitable in its ense of harmony, had devised the dainty adaptation of snowy muslin to its present beautiful uses and gone to worship conscious of performing its duties in the most graceful and becoming manuner. And wrapped in such thoughts your footsteps are directed by your unintentional guide to the centre of the camp unintentional guide to the centre of the camp. MILWAUKEE LAGER BEER, unintentional guide to the centre of the camp and the caves of the tabernacle.

Here the solemn sanctity and soul-inspiring majesty of the christian worship burst like a gleam of revelation upon you, scatter-ing all lighter thoughts and subduing every ual simplicity. In the mingled awe and rapture of the recent the soul stands out naked in its intimate communion with God. You feel the force of the presence of the Lord. Gazing upon the crowds before you, your soul is shaken as never before with a sense of the terrible and triumphant majesty of your Maker. This is not a religious picule, assome have flippantly said. There is no triffing here in the thought of invoking the Divine presence in the woods, under the shadow of the grand old transfer the grand old transfer the shadow of the grand old transfer the grand old transfer the shadow of the grand old transfer the pulling of a new road to completed for the building of a new road to complete the shadow of the grand that arrangements have been the grand to grand the gr The Dashaway Meeting.

The Dashaway Meeting Meeti call by stating that "the wife of the gentleman whom he had the pleasure to invite to speak had been the means of saving him from a drunkard's, if not a felon's, grave."

Mr. Pendell spoke feelingly on the subject, giving his experience. His remarks were received by the audience with marked attention and respect.

One of the old war-worn veteran Dashaways. John B. Dunning by name, known far and near as one of the stanchest temperance men in the country, being called upon by the president, begged to be excused, but the audience instating, he responded in such a manner as could none other save John. His description of the vice of intemperance as it appeared to him is his travels west was, to say the least, unique. He said that he had drank water where they had to boil it before using it, and that every man save himself had a pockel-fizek to relieve it of the "animalcule."

Brother Eggleston here saked the speaker to repeat this last word and explain it. This brought down the house with round after round of laughter and applause, but John, with his usual good nature, took in the situation and explained. He was followed by Dr. Reilly will not assuredly all fall on stony places or amid thorus and briers, nor by the wayside where the birds of the air will pick and boar it away, but in good ground where the major the briefs of the int will pick and boar it away, but in good ground where it may be a hundred-fold.
